with her lips, saluted the astonished votul-gern with a proity little kiss after the manner of the Saxons. This is how an old chronicler confirms the story:
"The pleasant practice of kissing was ut-terly unpracticed in England till the fair Princess Howens, the daughter of King Hengins, of Priesland, pressed the beaker with her lipkins and saluted the amorous Vertices with a busken." Vortigern with a busken."

The practice, once established, grew apace. In the fourteenth century we find a worthy Greek traveler named Chalcondyles, saying:

"As for English females and children, their customs are liberal in the extreme. For instance, when a visitor calls at a friend's house, his first act is to kiss his friend's wife. He is then a duly installed

When William IV., then Duke of Charence, made an excursion into Lower Canada he crossed over to the state of Vermont. There he stopped at a barber's street, worked in just as the operation was completed. The prince unceremoulously ravished a kiss from the lady with the remark, "There, now, tell your countrywomen that the son of the king of England has given a royal kiss to a Yankee barber's wife."

It is not known whether the lady rejoiced in the distinction. It is known that the barber did not. He seized the prince, and helping him out of the shop with his foot, exclaimed, "There, now, go and tell your ecountrywomen that a Yankee barber has given a royal kick to the son of the king of England."

It is not known whether the lady rejoiced in the distinction. It is known that the barber did not. He seized the prince, and barber is a first of ten products.

To conclude, here is a story that may be recommended to Lieutenant Hobson. At Boulogne, during the reception of Queen Victoria, June, 1855, a number of English ladies, in their anxiety to see everything, pressed with such force against the soldiers who were keeping the line that the latter were in some instances obliged to give way. The officer in command, observing the state of affairs, shouted out: "One roll of the drum—if they don't keep back kiss them all!"

At the first sound of the drum the English ladies took to flight. "If they had been French." was the comment of a Parisian journal, "they would have remained."

Sunflower oil is said to be more palatable even than oilve oil, but that may be a matter of taste. It is pale yellow in color, thicker than hempseed oil and without any rank flavor. Mr. Machalske says that in 1834 he secured a ton of sunflower seeds in the ear. He separated the hulls from the kernels and found that the proportion of the two substances was 25 per cent hulls of 55 per cent kernels. He put the 1300 "One roll of the drum—if they don't keep back kiss them all!"

To The Journal.

Being a careful reader of the various incidents of the day, local and otherwise, as they appear in The Journal, I have been not a little amused at the difference of opinion expressed by the people of our city for and against Hobson. Judgments from all points of view have been submitted save that of the medical man, whom it is presumed should be somewhat familiar.
